Creating an Anti-Racist Play Therapy Practice:

The Environment and Attending to Clinical Themes

The overriding goal of this workshop is to raise awareness about creating an anti-racist practice and the proactive ways that play therapists can address issues of equity and racial justice in our clinical practices. This workshop will be experiential in nature and will provide several guidelines for assessing the messages we might be sending to clients as they enter our therapy spaces. And more importantly, this workshop will help clinicians think through the potential continuum of responses when facing generic play that clearly manifests racist thoughts and attitudes. The balance between honoring play themes children raise, and a clinician's perspectives about racism, will be discussed through a variety of scenarios that clinicians could face in the play therapy office.
